Note:

27 national member societies are fully paid up. 10 not so.

In 2005 (cf. Bulletin 38, p. 48) 17 member societies were in very bad standing, i.e. had not paid for more than four years, and several others were not fully paid up. The situation, then, is considerably better now than in 2005. The IAHR Executive Committee is very happy about this and want to extend thanks to the member societies for their contributions and cooperation.

As regards those not paid up, the following remarks may be added: The IAHR General Secretary/Acting Treasurer has recently managed to get into contact, by mail or in person, with representatives from most of the member societies in bad standing.

It is thus my sincere hope that arrangements for payment of missing dues can be made before the end of this year with most of the societies in bad standing.

I have, however, not succeeded with getting into contacts with anybody pertaining to the Israel Society for the History of Religion, and any news that may lead to contact with this society, one of the oldest members to the IAHR, will be more than welcome.

According to a sad e-mail received earlier this year from Prof. Vinciane Pirenne, the Treasurer of the Société belgo-luxembourgeoise d'Histoire des Religions, this society has asked to be considered "no longer members of any supra-national association". I have, of course, asked the society whether the IAHR can be of any assistance in whatever effort to change this state of affairs.

In 2010 I intend to visit Cuba, and it is my hope that the IAHR may be of assistance in ongoing efforts to (re-)establish a (new) Cuban society. The Asociación Cubana de Estudios sobre la Religión seems to have died or become defunct with the untimely and sad passing away of its former president, Prof. J. R. Calzadilla.

As for the Russian association, recent e-mail communication signals that this association, long defunct and then dormant, may finally, thanks to concerted efforts and a more benign politico-religio situation, soon be revitalized.

Tim Jensen, IAHR Acting Treasurer, November 2009.
